RE: "THE INVISIBLE MAN" Sci-Fi TV series rights inquiry

Dear Mr. Firemark:

This letter is in response to your faxed inquiry dated February 13, 2006, sent on behalf of your client Amanda Rogers, and addressed to NBC/Universal Pictures regarding the above referenced project.

Your inquiry is appreciated. After conducting a preliminary review of our database, it appears that Universal owns all motion picture, television and allied rights associated with the "INVISIBLE MAN" title, including rights in and to the Sci-Fi television series; at this time, Universal Pictures is not interested in licensing or optioning any of the rights, title or interest it may currently hold in and to this property.

Attached please find a copy of Universal's company policy with regard to Outside Rights Requests.

Universal thanks you for your interest in its motion pictures and literary properties.

Sincerely,

Dominique O'Neill

OUTSIDE RIGHTS REQUESTS UNIVERSAL'S POLICY

Universal receives many requests each day regarding rights to these valuable assets. Please be advised that, generally, it is Universal's practice not to license intellectual property rights to third parties, as we believe these are corporate assets which Universal itself develops. No one can develop or use a Universal property without Universal's specific permission.

A systematic review of Universal's library of properties has been underway for many years. Please be advised that the fact that you have inquired as to a Universal property does not mean Universal has any obligation to you in connection with any future use of this property nor does it grant you any rights therein. Further, it is Universal's policy that all claims regarding use of Universal properties be resolved by final, binding arbitration before a single arbitrator using the JAMS rules, including the Optional Appeals Procedure.
